Farm 911 – The Emily Project

- Farm accidents can occur in remote locations
- Many rural & farm properties lack civic address signage
- Project in response to an on-farm accident involving the child of a farm family in Hastings County
- First Responders were unable to locate the scene of the accident

Farm 911 – The Emily Project

How it works:

- Municipalities create a form to request an address for farm field
- Designated address put into GIS/Grid system
- Becomes permanent part of emergency response system
- Sign in the ground is permanent address marker

Farm 911 – The Emily Project

Benefits:

- First responders at accident scene quicker
- Exact address – more reliable than cell phones
- Other community benefits:
 - road accident in rural area
 - non-emergency property location

Farm 911 – The Emily Project

Important to Note:

- Different from a new entrance application/permit
- More than 20 municipalities have a Farm 911 program
- Signs are typically offered free or at low cost
- Partnership with local Federation of Agriculture

In honour of Emily

In the event of an emergency, no one should have to wait helplessly for first responders to find them. Time is everything, and a civic address at the entrance to a vacant farm field could make all the difference.
