

Scan of community organizations with mandates and/or services aligned with City of Hamilton Volunteer Advisory Committees

July 2024

Prepared for: City of Hamilton

Prepared by: Social Planning and Research Council of Hamilton

In November 2023, the Social Planning and Research Council (SPRC) was engaged by the City of Hamilton’s Government Relations and Community Engagement Division to collect feedback from key community partners including VAC members, staff liaisons, and council members as part of the Volunteer Advisory Committee (VAC) review undertaken by the City. SPRC’s report “City of Hamilton Volunteer Advisory Committee Review: Engagement Report” outlines the feedback and recommendations based on these engagements.

In addition, at the request of City’s Government Relations and Community Engagement Division, SPRC developed the below list of organizations, community tables, and local collaboratives that have a mandate that, at least in part, are similarly aligned with the mandates of VACs. This includes organizations that provide significant programming and/or services in related areas.

Similarly aligned organizations and community tables have been provided for all VACs. The City’s Sub-Committees (e.g. Accessibility Committee for Persons with Disabilities and Agriculture and Rural Affairs Sub-committee) have not been included as they are not Volunteer Advisory Committees.

At the outset, it is important to acknowledge that this is not an exhaustive list. It is not intended to capture all not-for-profit entities that operate in areas related to the VACs, but rather provides a broad picture of organizations working in each area. The fluid nature of community-based work makes it difficult to capture all not-for-profit entities and community tables working in similar areas to VACs.

The selection of organizations and collaboratives was based on reviews of publicly available lists of organizations in different subject areas, the Hamilton Red Book, the City's Enrichment Fund recipient lists, a previous survey of city staff<sup>1</sup>, and existing knowledge and networks of SPRC staff. The criteria for inclusion were limited to non-profit organizations and associated community tables. In some instances where government/quasi-government entities are key players in a specific area, these have also been included. In generating this list, SPRC looked at organizations similarly aligned with aspects of the VAC mandates. Where not included on the City's VAC listing webpage, the mandates of the VACs included below were provided by City staff.

As highlighted in Appendix F of SPRC's "City of Hamilton Volunteer Advisory Committee Review: Engagement Report", VACs provide unique engagement opportunities for City staff and Council, and while there may be some consistencies between VACs and engagements with other community tables and organizations, there are also distinctions between engagement opportunities. These include:

- VAC membership is often made up of a larger portion of individual community members/constituents, whereas community tables are often made up of organizational representatives. Consultation with community tables or directly with organizations may provide a different perspective, representing institutional or agency feedback.
- As council representatives make up part of VAC membership, VACs have a direct link to council, which is not necessarily the case with community tables, collaboratives and organizations as consultation with these groups is often conducted by City staff.
- There are delineated processes for how VACs should be engaged and consulted by the City, that support transparency of VACs. These parameters are available to the public through VAC Terms of Reference, public VAC meetings, agendas, and minutes. The City's process for engaging and consulting with community bodies may not have the same degree of transparency for the public, although these consultations and relationships between the City and outside organizations also bring valuable feedback. City consultations with community organizations and tables are not typically open or recorded for the public and therefore may not have a clear framework on who gets consulted, when, and how frequently.
